Description: Maurer infamously used loose brushstrokes to create abstracted yet recognizable figures, as can be seen in “Flowers”. The artist’s use of shading is minimal. Instead, a darker line is used to denote contours of the object. Each line helps separate colors and renders the flowers in a design-like style. Among similarly shaped bright pink and pale yellow flowers, Maurer included one bright red rose. The flowers offer a warm splotch of color in an otherwise blue-toned painting. The vibrant and chaotic depiction of flowers draws the eye and then relinquishes it to the gentle, static background.
